"Oh, yes." She sighed. "It's so unfair for such a beautiful young man to have a physical impairment." "Listen, Jain?" "I'm pregnant," she announced to them that night, causing Song to delay her examination of the white fruit. Nolan rose, stretching, then stepped out into the hall. The shadows were darker here and everything was still. "Come on in," she said, stepping back. "We might as well talk about this." They entered, and the problem is cars. Know what I mean?" Nolan nodded, flexing his cramped limbs. He stepped out onto the dock, then hurried up the path. Things did settle down, as Lang had known they would. They entered their second week alone in virtually the same position they had started: no romantic entanglements firmly established. But they knew each other a lot better, were relaxed in the close company of each other, and were supported by a new framework of interlocking. "It's a cliché" of the American entertainment industry that if it works (i.e., if it makes money), do it again. It's a little unfair to denigrate Hollywood and its offshoots for this; most of the arts have been doing it since the Pleistocene. Certainly in films and on TV this makes for a lot of boring material; for instance, we've not seen the end of all the copies, blatant and otherwise, of Star Wars. Miss Tremaine looked up from her typing at the rattle and frowned. Her desk was out in the small reception area, but I had arranged both desks so we could see each other and talk in normal voices when the door was open. It stayed open most of the time except when I had a client who felt secretaries shouldn't know bis troubles. She had been transcribing the Lucas McGowan report for half an hour, humphing and tsk-tsking at thirty-second intervals. She was having a marvelous time. Miss Tremaine was about forty-five, looked like a constipated librarian, and was the best secretary I'd ever had. She'd been with me seven years.
